Sword Art Online levels downloadQ: Can our seats be taken away when traveling outside our country? I'm planning a trip to Germany and have read that they might request to take our seats on the plane, if we are traveling with them on the same flight. Could I be asked to move, and not even given a choice? A: No. This is only allowed for flight crew members (passengers are free to board or not on their own terms) and only for flights within their country. It is a rule of international aviation law. Example of a carry-on when traveling within Europe Image source: JetBlue In this case, the flight was a flight from London to Orlando. But this does not have to be a flight within Europe. The law would apply anywhere. A: As an example to add to the previous answers, airlines will occasionally require you to move your seat if there are 3 or 4 families travelling together. It doesn't happen often, but it has happened to me when I was flying with a 3-week old baby. However, it is pretty rare. I wouldn't worry about it. A: I thought I was the only one. But I just ended up on a very long ride up to a hotel in the same city in a bus (tough trip, I still remember some of the line-ups) where the police took the families' seats. They went for the parents and the kids. The present invention relates to a disk drive. In particular, the present invention relates to a disk drive having a stack on a load beam. A conventional disk drive includes a load beam, a flexure, and a slider. The load beam includes a head portion that has a load point. The flexure is on the load beam and has a mounting portion that is attached to the head portion and a flexure portion that is connected to the mounting portion at a flexure mounting end and to a head gimbal assembly at a load gimbal end. The slider is attached to the flexure and the slider and flexure are movable with respect to the load beam, which is stationary. The flexure has conductors that extend from the flexure portion to a flexure lead end. The flexure lead end is adjacent the mounting portion of the flexure. The flexure has a flexure portion lead end that is adjacent
